The Better Apology Guide

Simple words for saying sorry with honesty, care, and love.

A better apology is not about finding perfect words. It is about helping the person you love feel heard, respected, and cared for.

1. Slow down before you write the apology.

- What happened?
- What did I do or not do?
- When did it happen?
- Who was affected?
- What part of it may have hurt my partner most?
- Is this a one-time mistake, or part of a pattern?

2. A better apology includes:

- I name what I did.
- I show that I understand why it hurt.
- I do not hide behind excuses.
- I listen to what my partner needs me to understand.
- I give my partner room to still feel upset.
- I offer one small visible next step.

3. Try not to turn the apology into a defence.

Avoid saying:

- "But I didn't mean to."
- "You're overreacting."
- "I already said sorry."
- "I guess I can never do anything right."
- "Can we just move on?"
- "I thought we were okay now."

4. Put it together.

> "I'm sorry I _____.
> I understand this hurt you because _____.
> I can see how it may have made you feel _____.
> I do not want to excuse it or rush you to feel better.
> I love you, and I want to repair this with care.
> I want you to know _____.
> One small thing I will do differently is _____."

5. Remember:

The apology is the beginning of repair.
The next step is showing love in a way your partner can actually see.
